In the article, “Effects of topical ketorolac tromethamine 0.45% on intraoperative miosis and prostaglandin E₂ release during femtosecond laser-assisted cataract surgery” (J Cataract Refract Surg 2017; 43:492–497), the last sentence in the Results section of the Abstract should read as follows: “The mean aqueous humor PGE₂ concentrations were 893.60 pg/mL ± 843.10 (SD) in the conventional group, 1911.43 ± 1178.63 pg/mL in the femtosecond no-NSAID group, and 743.63 ± 927.46 pg/mL in the femtosecond NSAID group (P < .001, conventional versus femtosecond NSAID and femtosecond NSAID versus femtosecond no NSAID; P > .05, conventional versus femtosecond NSAID).

In the article, “Bilateral ectasia after femtosecond laser-assisted small-incision lenticule extraction” (J Cataract Refract Surg 2015; 41:884–888), the affiliation for author Mohamed Tarek El-Naggar, MD, FRCS, is Research Institute of Ophthalmology, Giza, Egypt, in addition to the International Eye Hospital, Cairo, Egypt.